Corbion Completes Proactive Transition to Non-PHO

Industry pioneer offers complete non-PHO portfolio, helping customers claim market leadership

Leadership requires action. At Corbion, that means we didn't wait for the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) deadline of removing all partially hydrogenated oils (PHOs) from food products by June 2018. Corbion targeted January 2017 for providing non-PHO replacements for our entire portfolio, including emulsifiers, mixes and bases. Today, we announced that we have hit our target: Corbion has discontinued the use of PHOs and now offers a complete portfolio of drop-in non-PHO solutions with full functionality.

"By offering the complete portfolio now, Corbion helps customers make the transition smoothly and easily," says Jim Robertson, global product manager, emulsifiers. "Our customers can provide the eating experience and quality consumers expect, along with the cleaner labels they want."

Robertson says Corbion's proactive investment in non-PHO solutions allows customers to position their companies as market leaders while making food "cleaner, safer, simpler and tastier."

"As an example, when we converted to the Ensemble™ emulsifier solutions, bakers quickly realized they could maintain the flavor and texture of their goods without PHOs – and without sacrificing quality, handling or shelf life," Robertson says. "The results are delicious."
