Holland Heating receives major order for Norwegian Cruise Line Ships from Imtech Marine.

Systemair (NASDAQ OMX Stockholm: SYSR) company Holland Heating has received an order for air handling units, worth approximately EUR 5.5 million, from Imtech Marine, Hamburg for two new ships.

The new ships will be built at Meyer Werft in Papenburg Germany and will be the largest in the Norwegian Cruise Line Ships fleet at 163.000 tons and 4.200 passengers each. Ship deliveries are planned for October 2015 and spring 2017.

Holland Heating will deliver 85 air handling units made of stainless steel with special components and integrated controls for each ship.

"We are proud to be selected to deliver the air handling units for these prestigious ships and are very happy to continue our long lasting relationship with Imtech Hamburg.", says Jos van Dongen, Managing Director Holland Heating.

"Holland Heating has over 15 years experience in the development and production of air handling units for marine and off shore applications. This new order confirms that our customers have confidence in our quality and reliability.", continues Jos van Dongen.
