INVISIO receives follow-up order from the Australian defense

INVISIO (IVSO) has received a follow up order from the Australian Department of Defense through its partner Defcon Technologies Group. The order includes communication systems with hearing protection and related equipment to a value of about SEK 13 million. Deliveries will be made gradually over the first six months in 2016.

The order is the second from the Australian Department of Defense and the Land 125 Soldier Modernisation Program under the agreement signed in October 2015. Both orders are expected to be delivered to the customer during the first half of 2016.

"It is pleasing to have a follow-up order from the customer already. The Australian defense is currently undergoing an extensive modernization in order to improve for example the soldier's control, efficiency and personal safety. Our products and expertise will be an important part of the modernization process," says Lars Højgård Hansen, CEO of INVISIO.

The order consists of INVISIO S10, a combined communication and hearing protection system as well as the in-ear headset INVISIO X5, for use with a radio. The system ensures a good hearing protection while the wearer is able to communicate and understand important information in their environment.
