

Teleca joins LiMo Foundation

Teleca brings its best-in-class services in Open Source software development, integration, customization, and testing to the unifying force in Mobile Linux

Malmö, Sweden – November 4, 2009 – Teleca, a world-leading supplier of solutions and services to the mobile industry today announced that it has joined the LiMo Foundation (www.limofoundation.org/). Mobile device manufacturers and operators wanting to develop products based on the LiMo Platform can now benefit from Teleca's global scale, track record in developing innovative solutions for Open Source, and secure systems integration services.

The LiMo Foundation is a global industry consortium of mobile leaders dedicated to creating an open, consistent Linux-based software platform for use by the whole mobile industry. The organization enables the development and production of mobile devices through a balanced and transparent contribution process enabling a rich ecosystem of differentiated products, applications, and services from device manufacturers, operators, ISVs and integrators.

"There is a huge addressable market for LiMo handsets worldwide with the mobile industry gravitating more and more towards collaborative open platforms," says Andrew Till, vice president, Solutions Marketing. "Our expertise in offering tailored solutions using Open Source Software components will bring the benefits of faster time-to-market and lower costs to companies developing products based on LiMo. Additionally we offer companies the freedom to innovate and differentiate their services on top of a common platform."

"We are very pleased that Teleca, with its proven skills in Linux development is joining the LiMo Foundation," says Morgan Gillis, executive director, LiMo Foundation. "Teleca's ability to successfully work with both device manufacturers and operators makes it a valuable asset and strong integration partner for all LiMo members."
